By Erika Dean I Bananastock / Bananastock / Getty Images If you are using Microsoft Excel, you have access to many office models, such as those for the reports of expenses, invoices, taxes and calendars. The use of these models can save you the time you would use to create something alone. If you need to add a three-month calendar for Excel, you can do it by downloading a model from Microsoft Office online. Open the Excel workbook to which you want to add a three-month calendar. Click the Office button and select "New". This will open a list of Microsoft Office online templates. Click on the "Calendars" tab and search through the calendars. When you find a three-month calendar, click "Download". The calendar model will open on a new page. Highlight the calendar with your mouse. Right-click and select "Copy". Right-click on the worksheet area you want to insert the three-month calendar, then select "Paste". A three-month calendar will now be added to the Excel worksheet. Of Melissa Worcester The JupiterImages / photoss.com / Getty Images A two-page month calendar is an excellent compromise between a monthly calendar, where each page contains a month and a weekly planner, where each page contains a week. Spread a month on two pages gives more space to write in a square of each date, but it still allows you to see the whole month at a glance. It is difficult to find planners in this format, but you can easily make it alone. Download printable calendar models that display a monthly two-page calendar (see Resources). Young woman files are in PDF format and Vertex42 files are in XLS format (spreadsheet). Open and view the files you downloaded to acquire familiar with them. The Vertex42 model contains macro that automatically updates the calendar with the correct dates. Both formats are two-page file. Make a mockup of pages that will pack on your calendar. The easiest way to do it is to cut a paper in small rectangles, on the size of business cards. Stack and staple on the vertical edge on the left to make a small book. Write the month on every two pages spread like this: write "January" on the page to the left of the first two-page diffusion, and "January" on the right page opposite. Quickly observe two things: (1) Every single month is not printed back-to-back on the same sheet of paper and (2) the first page of the first page is a right page that does not have a designated month. Create a page for the first and last blank pages, if you wish. You can make a title page for the first and a page for notes or addresses for the last page. Print the pages, using your mockup as a guide to make sure the paging sheets properly. Print the title page, then the left side of January on the back of that sheet. Then print the right side of January with the left side of February on the back of it. Continue printing until you have finished. Stuff the printed pages and check it to see that they printed correctly, so that every diffusion of two pages show the two half of a single month. Tie your calendar. You can do it using a three-hole punch to punch the holes on the pages and put them in a three-hole binder, or you can use a combing machine or spiral tying to tie them. We are proud to offer a variety of seminars and programs relevant to the various work we do. The event calendar lists these seminars and programs. Many cultures have used months whose lengths were or 30 days (or a bit of alternation) to cut one year in increments. The main problem with this type of system is that the lunar cycles, at 29.5 days, are uniformly divided into 365.25 days a year. When you look at the modern calendar, the months are extremely confusable. One has 28 or 29 days, some have 30 days and the rest has 31 days. According to the "World Book Book Here's how we got a calendar as a funny: the Romans started with a 10-month calendar in 738 BC, borrowing from the Greeks. The months of the original Roman calendar were Marzio, Aprilis, Maius, Junius, Quintilis, Sestile, September, October, November and December. The Quintilis names in December come from Roman names for five, six, seven, eight, nine and 10. This calendar left about 60 days missing for The Gennaro and February were later added at the end of the year to take into account The 60 reciprocal days.in 46 BC, Giulio Cesare changed the calendar. Ignoring the moon, but keeping the existing names 12 of the month, the year was divided into 12 months that have 30 or 31 days, except Februarius at the end with 29 days. Every four years, Februarius earned a more day. Later, he decided to make gennaro the first month, instead of Marzio, making Februarius the second month, which explains why the day jump is to a point that funny in the premature death of the Year.after Giulio, the Romans They renamed Quintilis in his honor, from here July.Similarly, Sestile was renamed in honor of Augustus, from here August. Augusto also moved one day from February to Augustus so that he would have had the same number of days like julius.this some story explains why we have 12 months, because the months have the number of days they have, because day of Jump falls into such an odd time and why the months have such Names.what fun weeks? Days, months and years everyone has a natural base, but weeks they don't. They come directly from the Bible: remember the Saturday day to sanctify it. Six days Shalt though of work, and do all the work yours, but the seventh day is Saturday in honor of the Lord, your God (Exodus 20: 8) This fourth commandment, of course, the echoes of the history of creation in Genesis.The Romani gave the names to the days of the week based in the sun, the moon and the names of the five planets known to the Romans: SunmoonMarsmercuryJupititerVenus Saturnthese names actually performed up to European languages enough up close, and in English the names on Sunday, Monday and Saturday made straight. The other four names in English have been replaced with the names of Anglo-Saxon divinity. According to British encyclopedia: Tuesday comes from Tiu, or Tiw, the Anglo-Saxon name for Tyr, the northern war of the war. Tyr was one of the sons of Odin or Woden, the supreme divinity, after which he was appointed Wednesday. Likewise, Thursday comes from Thor's days, in honor of Thor, the God of Thunder. Friday was derived from Frigg's Days, Frigg, Odino's wife, who represents love and beauty, in narrenasy mythology.
