Billionaire investors are in a league of their own. It is not necessarily their wealth that puts them there, but rather their success in the markets, in asserting themselves at the highest levels of the financial world, which has built their wealth. Cathie Wood, founder and CEO of Ark Invest, a $75 billion asset manager, is one of Wall Street’s most influential investors, thanks to her stock-choice power and impressive returns. Looking at the current market situation, Wood says “The Big Short” is bearish. But not on this trio of games.In this article, we discuss the wood Cathie is buying these 10 stocks. Wood [A&A]The shares of uranium mining company Uranium Energy (NYSEMKT: UEC) decreased by 11.5% starting at 2:00 p.m. on Friday ET. By now, you might know the story: uranium miners are looking for $60 a kilo of uranium, while investors are betting that the global transition to non-global warming energy sources will inevitably lead to increased demand for nuclear fuel. The problem is that whenever uranium prices have started to move in the “right” direction in recent months, they have stopped and come down again.Apple (NASDAQ: AAPL) It was a popular title on Friday, with an increase of almost 2% from the slight drop in the S&P 500 index, ending with a new all-time high of over $160 per share. Following an article published Thursday by Bloomberg, Morgan Stanley analyst Katy Huberty said he was enthusiastic about the product à the Apple Car that will apparently be launched as early as 2025. Huberty wrote that the Apple Car “could both speed up the adoption of new technologies (electric vehicle) + [autonomous vehicle] and expand the addressable market similar to that of previous Apple product launches”. The shares of Plug Power hydrogen fuel cell technology are rising sharply on Friday after the launch of the Apple Car.” Analyst Morgan Stanley Stephen Byrd has increased his price target on the stock by 51%. Byrd raised its price target on Plug Power (ticker: PLUG) to $65 from $43, citing an increase in revenue estimates after management issued optimistic forward-looking statements in its third quarter earnings call. Plug Power, which produces hydrogen-powered forklifts, plans to build hydrogen-powered heavy trucks while producing and distributing the hydrogen gas needed for its transportation products.Investor’s Business DailyThe Dow Jones also collapsed Apple stock and Nike have exploded. The Donald Trump SPAC took a dive following a call from the probe. The shares of Nvidia (NASDAQ: NVDA) climbed 4% on Friday, as optimism for the chipmaker’s data center opportunity and Omniverse initiatives continued to build among investors. For one, Raymond analyst James Chris Chris repeated its strong purchase valuation on Nvidia. Case said that Nvidia’s supply constraints are facilitating as the demand for its data center offerings is increasing, creating a favorable environment for continued growth. Upstart Holdings (NASDAQ: UPST) went public in December 2020, and fintech immediately caught fire. In practice, this means that Upstart’s banking partners can approve almost three times as many borrowers as possible, keeping fraud and loss rates constant. Two underperforming chip titles could be due for a rebound as memory trends improve, according to one analyst. Talk about the next metaverse has reached a fever pitch in recent months. In the latest development, Meta Platforms (NASDAQ: FB) -- the company formerly known as Facebook -- changed its name to highlight its focus. Simply put, the metaverse is a virtual world that harnesses the power of a collection of emerging technologies, including augmented reality (AR), virtual reality (VR), and video, and allow users to interact in a digital world. Here are three stock ideas COVID-19: a biotech vaccine, a pharmaceutical department store, and an investment in a reopening. At 7 a.m., analysts at investment bank JP Morgan revised their price target on Lithium Americas Corp (NYSE: LAC) the highest stock -- to $39 per share. Now, JP Morgan’s note (covered today on TheFly.com) wasn’t the only reason Lithium Americas shares went up, but it was definitely a contributing factor. As the banker explained, the price of lithium metal for electric car batteries is rising, with prices on spodumene (a rock containing lithium) and lithium carbonate (a lithium salt) continuing to move higher. The emergence of the global economy from the Covid-19 pandemic has coincided with entirely different challenges, including global supply chain issues. The persistent effect has affected production, distribution and transport and has led to shortages, longer waiting times for consumers and rising prices across the board. However, according to JPMorgan’s Major Global Markets Strategist Marko Kolanovic there is a light at the end of the (congested) tunnel. àThe pressures of the global supply chain are Investor’s Business DailyHundreds of Chinese companies are listed in the U.S. markets. With more than two billion customers a year to more than 7,000 restaurants worldwide, almost everyone has a favorite (or at least favored) element in Taco Bell — but what is a lover taco to do when their go-to object is interrupted? While their menu has not had too many changes over the years, some of them have still caused waves. (Repense in September 2019, when a huge nine items at once got cut, including the Double Decker Taco, Fiery Doritos Locos Tacos, and Cool Ranch Tacos.) Then on August 13, 2020 they freed all the following:7-Layer Burrito*Beefy Fritos Burrito® Cheese flair potato Chips & DipsGrilled Steak Soft TacoGrillieresponsible (Cheese potato, Beefy Nacho)Mini Skillet BowlNachos SupremeSpicy Potato Moribida TacoSpley TostadaTricho And now we know that Mexican pizza will go away on November 5, 2020. So pico de gallo and chopped chicken. The August 2020 announcement was initially made by a Taco Bell employee on Reddit and sent social media to a tizzy. Taco Bell confirmed the voices in a press release shortly after, stating that, “we will simplify our menu. This advanced menu approach comes after months to analyze the new way we manage our restaurants. We want to ensure an easy and fast ordering experience for our guests and team members, while at the same time we open opportunities for greater innovation.” The release also noted that, “...while change is difficult, a simplified menu and innovation process will leave room for new favorite fans, continues progress in categories such as plant-based diets, and also opportunities for returning some classics on a limited time basis.” The most recent announcement in September confirming the disappearance of Mexican pizza cites Mike Grams, Taco Bell President, Global COO: “We are constantly evaluating the ways to provide a more efficient restaurant experience, and we have already begun to see progress from simplifying our menu. While we know that fans can be understandably sad to see some of their favorites go, this evolution of our menupave the way for new ideas. Creativity and innovation in our kitchen did not slow down at all, and we look forward to launching new favourite fans.” To this end, these new menus will be available from 5 November 2020 (because, by paraphrases, as well asThe Bell tower is full, Taco Bell also donth: Chicken Popotle MeltDragonfruit Stop! Whatever the reason for their removal, although many of these items will definitely end up being for the best, some of them to get the axe à now and in the past à have been considered beloved favorites. In this list, we’re going to remember (and cringe) on those nixed articles à explore and discuss good, evil, and cattle. Double Decker TacoThis is, as Taco Bell puts it, “like the taco bunk bed.” If we were to go with an analogy of bedding, we’d want it to a pillow-top mattress instead: the solid crunchy taco shell base that holds the all-important padding (no Ground cow, cheese, and lettuce), with the outer layer of plush (i.e. the equivalent of memory foam) providing a pleasing comfort, in the form of a warm and soft tortilla welded to the structurally important taco with melted cheese beans conchi melted cheese. A dream you know. But this was assigned to the virtual dump too soon (fortunately, it is easy to recreate at home). Mexican Pizza Although it hasn’t gone enough yet, it will be a distant memory too soon. Fortunately, this layered creation of beef, beans, crispy tortilla, cheese, red sauce and sour cream is even easier to make at home. Try this Taco Bell Mexican Pizza recipe when your craving strikes after November. Nacho Crunch Grilled Stuft BurritoTaco Bell was introduced in 2005 and lasted only one year. It consisted of two servings of beef or chicken, nacho cheese, beans, green onions, tomatoes, sour cream and crispy red tortilla strips. If you’re like me, don’t remember the burrito itself, but remember this hilarious commercial for the article that plays Dave the ãfunny man.àNacho Fries Just introduced in January 2018, Taco Bell’s Nacho Fries with their fatigue and the nacho hot goo cup for diving were taken away. too fast à but, in a very modeled move on the McRib, they came back in January 2019! Then they left again, then they came back in June, and (shocker) were thrown away again. It’s about playing with our emotions. The cycle must be repeated, but only time will tell exactly when. (Update: Now that all the potato items are off the menu, we might be wrong about chips... but let’s keep hope out; like nacho cheese, it flows forever.) Green SaucePerhaps one of the most controversial deletions Taco Bell was Green Sauce. His delightful absence remains a touching subject for many people, and even Taco Bell has admitted to losing it. àI was really surprised when Verde Sauce was removed from the menu, à The sauce has been withdrawn from the menu in 2016, but it is actually still available for purchase on Amazon and (sometimes) on Walmart. For some, it must dispose of authenticity (or at least of the novelty), as the different salsa packages still work for multiple dollars on eBay. We cross your fingers you will come to one of the lucky regional markets that will see the green sauce coming back to the menu in November! Bell BeeferThe beloved Bell Beefer was available for about 20 years until the middle of the 1990s. Often considered as the attempt of Taco Bell to penetrate the market of the burger chain, the sandwich was essentially a silly Joe covered with taco seals. Served on a sandwich, the Bell Beefer boasted taco meat, lettuce, chopped onions and delicate Taco Bellà sauce. There was also a “Supreme” version of the burger, with the addition of tomatoes cut into cubes and their mixture of three cheeses. Despite the popularity of the object decreased in the 1980s, Bell Beefer still has a fan base that asks for its return. Quinn thinks it doesn’t belong in the menu. “It seems simply wrong,” he said. Doritos Locos Tacos & Cool Ranch TacosEntrambi Fiery Doritos Locos Tacos and Cool Ranch Doritos The tacos were removed from the menu last September, but the wound still looks fresh. It may still be possible to request a Double Decker on the DL, style secret menu, but Doritos shells have long gone (crossing fingers, they also return to McRib at some point; otherwise, create your own Cool Ranch Doritos taco shells). Fully Loaded NachosMolti of you will probably remember the Fully Loaded Nachos, about 2008 and 2009. Served in a bowl of tortilla-chip, this item “Fully Loaded” was known for its large portions. “These were huge,” said Quinn. “I think people often bought them for their value.” Extra chips, double ground beef, sauce, guacamole, sour cream, red tortilla strips fried beans, their blend of three cheeses and Taco Bell nacho sauce were piled one over the other for this substantial snack, complete with a bowl of chips on the bottom that caught and collected all the delicious nacho debris. Black Jack TacoThis interrupted taco was available for a short time in 2009 as a promotion for Halloween. Called for its black shell, Black Jack Taco immediately made news for its chromatic qualities not at the table, but on the toilet. Let’s just say if this taco was a combo, it would be a number two. Apart from the color, this beef taco was quite essential, with only lettuce, Baja sauce and the famous blend of three Taco Bell cheeses.ClipasTaco BellChowhoundChi has been loyal to Taco Bell for more than thirty years could remember the object that preceded the Cinnamon Twisà Crunchy. Composed of a slightly fried tortilla with a dust ofAnd sugar, Crispas only cost 39 cents. Despite their removal from the menu at the end of the 1980s, the sweet sweet was quite popular that many cooks have posted their own recipes for it online. Cinnamon-Sugar Chip Apple Empanadas Sugar Recipe While these were a much newer element (contrasting in 2004), they were great. They were like McDonald’s apple pies but much better -- with the addition of caramel in the filling, there was never any competition between the two desserts (the reverse of how the new Ananas Whip Freeze of Taco Bell has nothing on OG Dole Whip.) But the offer of Taco Bell apple disappeared last August. According to society, “Even the sweetest things of life do not last forever.” Too real, Taco Bell. Too real. At least we still have cinnamon shots. Volcano Taco and Lava SauceSimilar to Black Jack Taco, the Volcano Taco is often remembered for its unique—broken brilliant color. The taco was complete with ground beef, lettuce and lava sauce, a controversial taco element with notoriety for its ability to cause indigestion. The Taco Volcano has been marketed as Taco Bell’s spiciest taco ever, with the help of its destructive sauce. “They were spiced,” said Quinn. “But this did not prevent people from ordering them.” The sauce was interrupted in 2013, but reported two years later due to popular demand on social media. In 2016, it was removed from the menu for a second time and is not reappeared, despite some outrage. Enchirito The pensioner Enchirito is still so popular, has an updated Wikipedia page. This Frankensteinian border hybrid of an enchilada and a burrito was initially introduced in the late 1960s and was hugely popular in the 1970s and 1980s. The product, consisting of a tortilla full of ground beef, onions and pine beans; then, suffocated with red sauce and cheese; and finally, seasoned with four or five sliced olives. It was interrupted in 1993, but many of you might remember his return to the menu in 2000—sans the olives and in a different container. He remained a basic menu until the Taco Bell published the Smothered Burrito in 2013, reporting the Enchirito to the menu mausoleum for the good, presumably. “The Enchirito was one of my favorite articles,” said Quinn. “It’s probably the best I can’t order anymore.” Salad seafood salad was Taco Bell’s disconcerting attempt to fight other fast food restaurants Lent-friendly options like Filet-O-Fish. This attractive commercial since the launch of the 1986 product marketing campaign gives an idea of the painting they were trying to paint. Served in a bowl of tortilla, the salad was surmounted with minced cheese, tomatoes, olives, shrimp, white fish and snow crab. “I like the smell of Taco Bell, even now after working there,” Quinn said. “What is said, I don’t like the idea of that smell combined with the smell of cooked fish. I’m glad I wasn’t into serve these à Understandably, the product was met with a sense of disbelief from customers and flopped quickly. The Bacon menu by Sizzlin In 1995, 1995, Bell found himself in the middle of bacon craze, a fad with which hamburger chains could easily work. In response, they launched three new bacon menus as part of their new, competitive Sizzlinà Bacon Menu. The items, complete with traditional Taco Bell staples combined with bacon and ranch, were the Bacon Cheeseburger Burrito for $1.79, the B.L.T. Soft Taco for 79 cents, and the Chicken Club Burrito for $1.99, respectively. However, customers quickly began to complain about both undercooked bacon and overcooked, and questioned the role of ranch in a taco. Unexpectedly, all the products went bankrupt in the early 2000s. No matter your background or your preferences, almost everyone has found themselves in a Taco Bell at some point. While some of us proudly have the app on our smartphones, others shamefully slide through the drive-through for an indulgent late night snack. No matter how you want to shoot it, one thing is for sure: its menu may change, but Taco Bell is not going anywhere. According to Quinn, even years in Taco Bell’s kitchen did not discourage his occasional greedy. à I worked there for a long time and sometimes I still want their food. Not many fast food employees can say that about where they worked, Quinn said. àIt definitely has a role in American culture and a very devoted fanbase à but I think it’s well deserved.à For now, just be sure to enjoy your favorite items while they last because you never know when they might disappear forever. If you don’t believe me, read this shameless petition for the return of Green Sauce. Sauce.
