According to the traditional conception of cause and effect, a particular event would lead to another specific event, implying that there should be an earlier event with a relation to it. However, modern science suggests that this concept is flawed and must be replaced by the idea of laws of change. The notion of change can also apply to personal growth and development. Just as a nation evolves over time, individuals grow and change just like their surroundings. This idea was understood by America's founders when they declared independence from the world, knowing that the country would have to adapt and evolve to preserve its ideals: life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. paraphrased text here
